

Why the Restoration of the Roman Empire Should Be on Everyone's Mind

Op-ed by Decimus Ironicus

In today's fast-paced world, where the most pressing issues often revolve around technology advancements, climate change, and the latest season of some reality TV show, it's high time we shift our collective focus to a matter of truly epochal importance: the restoration of the Roman Empire. Yes, you read that correctly. In an age where nostalgia reigns supreme (can we talk about the comeback of vinyl records?), what's more nostalgic than bringing back the glory days of Rome?

1. Economic Stability: Caesar-Style

Forget cryptocurrency; let's talk about Denarius-currency! The Roman economy, with its straightforward system of coins, offers a much-needed respite from the complexities of modern finance. Imagine a world where your biggest economic worry is whether you have enough silver coins for a loaf of bread or a ticket to the Colosseum. Plus, with Rome back in charge, we could finally make 'SPQR' a trending hashtag.

2. Fashion Renaissance: Togas for Everyone

Let's face it, fashion these days is too complicated. What with seasonal trends, fast fashion, and the perennial question of whether skinny jeans are still in. The solution? Togas. A unisex garment that's both stylish and comfortable, the toga is ripe for a comeback. It's time to embrace the draped elegance that our Roman ancestors knew all too well. Plus, think of the savings on wardrobe!

3. Infrastructure Wonders: Roads and Aqueducts 2.0

Modern infrastructure, while functional, lacks a certain... grandeur. The Romans were masters of building roads and aqueducts that not only stood the test of time but also looked magnificent. Imagine highways akin to the Appian Way, lined with statues and mile markers. And let's not forget aqueducts – who needs pipelines when you can have majestic water bridges crossing the landscape?

4. Political Simplicity: All Hail the Emperor

Democracy, with all its debates, elections, and the endless cycle of political ads, can be so draining. The Roman model offers a simpler solution: an emperor. One ruler, one set of rules. Sure, there might be the occasional despotic tyrant, but let's not get bogged down in details. Think of the efficiency!

5. Entertainment: Gladiators over Influencers

In a world where social media influencers hold sway, let's throw it back to the real influencers: gladiators. The Colosseum could be the new Instagram, where gladiators battling it out with lions provide a more thrilling spectacle than any filtered selfie ever could. And let's not forget the chariot races – who needs Formula 1 when you have a chariot thundering down the Circus Maximus?

6. Culinary Delights: A Feast for the Senses

Finally, let's talk about food. Roman cuisine, with its love for bread, wine, and olives, is not only delicious but also relatively simple. Forget avocado toasts and quinoa salads; it's time to bring back the simplicity of a Roman feast. And with the revival of Roman dining customs, who wouldn't enjoy reclining on a couch while eating?

While the idea of restoring the Roman Empire might seem far-fetched, perhaps it's exactly the kind of out-of-the-box thinking we need in these modern times. After all, who wouldn't want to say 'veni, vidi, vici' to their everyday challenges while dressed in a stylish toga? So, as we ponder the future, let's cast a glance backward to the past – all roads lead to Rome, after all.